could have married, and the parties are declared wed. This is the binding ritual which makes them husbands and wife. Unless it has been performed, the wife is not allowed into any private house or monastery in Ladak, just as unmarried girls are not permitted to worship at shrines, except at those of families in the houses.

A feast lasting three days is the next item on the programme. On the first day, the local villagers are fed, on the second the relatives and friends, and on the third the helpers and members of the bridegroom's p'ha-spun. Dancing round the Drangyas and the Sha-kog still standing in the yard, takes place on each of these days, and on the last one, it is broken up and distributed to the family and relatives, who accept the pieces as holy and of good omen. The Sha-kog, particularly, is taken to the bride's home, where it is sliced into pieces and given to her family to eat, the last morsel being given to her. Then the witnesses are paid off, each of them, in 1938, getting one rupee, and their helpers half that amount, while the lamas, who took part in the ceremony, receive a square piece of cloth each and some cash.

In the case of a mag-pa marriage, the same order of procedure is followed, except that the roles are reversed, so to speak, the man taking the part of the woman, and the woman that of the bridegroom. It is the mag-pa who is conducted in ceremony to the bride's house, and not the other way round. When signing the contract of marriage, it is the girl's parents who endorse the pledge that her future husband will enjoy the property which is hers with him.

3. Division of property between parents and children

When the eldest child of a Buddhist family in Ladak marries, the time has come for his or her parents to leave their home, to give up the house and the property belonging to it to their son of daughter, who has the right to enter immediately into possession of the greater part of his or her inheritance.

A small portion, sufficient for the support of the several fathers, the mother and unmarried younger sisters that there may be, is made over to them while the remaining, larger portion, is at once acquired by the eldest son or daughter as his or her exclusive property.

This custom, which forces parents of grown-up, married children to retire from active life and from the responsibilities of their household when they are still not much beyond middle age, is called K'hang chen K'hang gu cho ches (K'hang ch'hen K'hang bu Pyo Ches), or translated literally, "Big house, small house to make".

The parents and the unmarried sisters go to live in the k'hang-gu or small house (which may be either a small part of the large house, or a separate one on the family land, or even lodgings in some one else's house if a k'hang-gu cannot be afforded by the family), while the eldest son or daughter takes over the major portion of the household which is called the K'hang-chen.

The reason for doing things in this way is, I was told by Joseph Gergan on the 6th October 1938, that bride and mother-in-law unless separated, are sure to quarrel. A Tibetan proverb says:

P'ha gNyen-bo sGo rGyap-la
Ma gNyen-bo Gog sBugs-la

which means:

"The father's relations are behind the door
The mother's relations are right inside the hearth."

Or, in other words, that the relations of the husband(s) should be turned out, while the wife's relations can always be sure of a warm welcome in in the home – that is in a bag-ma household; in a mag-pa one this naturally does not apply.

Reasons for the existence of this special custom, valid for both bag-ma and mag-pa marriage, have been given as the fact that the parents are getting old (after fifty, Ladakis, like Tibetans, age very quickly), and that, for this reason, they can no longer assume responsibility for the cultivation of the land, nor continue to bear the burden of the recurring festivals, etc. So they go into the k'hang-gu where they have no obligations any more, and leave their newly wedded children to shoulder the charges which go with possession of the k'hang-chen.

The k'hang-gu consists of a smaller house, standing generally on the land of the k'hang-chen, and of the fields called To-zhing (lTo-zhing), "food-field", necessary for the maintenance of the persons who live in it. No charges or dues are collected from the k'hang-gu by the Kashmir State, and those who live in it do so absolutely freely. The portion of the father or fathers is called p'ha-skal (P'ha-skal), and that of the mother ma-skal (Ma-skal), for such division between parents is observed. Unmarried sisters live on the p'ha-skal.

The fields of the k'hang-gu can be cultivated by the inhabitants of the k'hang-chen; this saves trouble for the old folk. But if no such labour is forthcoming, then the ma-skal will be cultivated by the relatives of the mother, while the fathers and the unmarried sisters will look after the p'ha'skal.

Apart from land to be tilled, there are some animals in the k'hang-gu

562 Among a rough people like the Bhots it is difficult to say what 695 would naturally be the character of the women; that is, what it would be if they had the same liberty of ordinary social intercourse which they now possess, but held to the rule of one woman to one man. I incline to think that polyandry has a bad effect on their natures; that, beyond the openness which one admires, it makes them over-bold, shameless, and causes them to be in a general way coarser than their other circumstances need make them. And to the same custom I attribute the greater facileness, as compared with neighbouring countries, with which those connections with foreigners are formed that have resulted in so many varieties of half-castes at Leh.

CERTAIN CUSTOMS.

886 There is a rather curious custom of the father and mother of 428 a grown-up family retiring from active life and its responsibilities at a time when they may not be much beyond middle-age. When the son is married and has a child then the time has come for the grandfather and grandmother to leave their home, to give up the house and the land to their son. They go into a very small house near, taking only one or two head of cattle, and retaining just enough land for themselves to attend to and raise grain from for their food. After this is done they have no more claim on the son, who becomes legal owner of the family property. There is often a house attached to a holding which is put to this very use. The amount of land to be given over is regulated by custom; this, on the death of the old people, comes back to the estate. If there be two fathers alive they are both got rid of and provided for in this way.

764 In the disposal of their dead the Bhots follow the Hindū
177 custom of burning. But whereas the Hindūs seldom or never let twenty-four hours elapse between death and cremation, these Bhots keep the corpse for many days, feasting their friends round it; the higher in rank the deceased man was, the longer they keep him from the dissolution of fire.
